I'm experimenting with ES6 imports. The following line: import user from './user' treats user as an import. If I change it to import {user} from './user' it works fine. Why? A: You need to export user, if the variable is not exported then it's treated as an import. export user from './user'; A North Carolina woman was on the brink of death after being bitten by six rattlesnakes. Lexi Riley, 19, told ABC News that she was on her way to a getaway cabin at Lake Waccamaw when she was bitten by a young male rattlesnake. "I didn't even know it was a snake," Riley said. "I was just walking down a trail and I saw the snake and I saw it was up against a tree. I went to walk past it and it was coming towards me so I stepped back quickly and it was gone." ADVERTISEMENT Riley recalled that at the time she had nothing on and no idea where she was. "I just took off running," she said. "I remember being in the woods and just falling down." While in the woods, she suffered from panic attacks. She thought the snake had given her rabies but was relieved to find out that she was bitten by the rattlesnake. "I got home and the people told me I had to get to the hospital," she said. "I was bitten in the arm and they thought I had rabies." Riley was treated at White Oak Medical Center in Taylorsville, North Carolina and recovered from the snake bites. In December, a North Carolina woman found a venomous pit viper while hiking along the Snake River.
