No user interaction needed MS-DOS and Windows for a long time have had a problem in the same time of starting applications: the need to create a path to the executable file. Even if in the basic environments this path is created automatically, later and in other environments you have to create it manually. Windows Xp has a memory problem: it starts too many processes, but does not destroy them all. This app will search the Windows Xp registry and locate all the processes that Windows Xp starts and the ones that were not closed properly. Last time when I went to any page with too many downloads/plugins, I got so tired and irritated that I forgot which downloads I had installed until I got a message from Firefox to re-install it! So I did and I was like 'Woah! I didn't know this was installed!' This is a must have! I have it installed on all my Windows XP computers. Firefox is a big memory hog and sometimes it takes over 20 MB of RAM. With this add-on it reduces that to 3 MB (in my test). The Firefox address bar is still there, but the entire toolbar is gone. You can also choose to remove all add-ons, which removes the toolbar and the address bar too. Courier is a fully featured, web-based mail client and messaging system.
