This is a simple and easy to use utility for installing an external battery icon into the RocketDock Notification Area. The information displayed on the battery meter docklet is a simple representation of battery percentage with an icon representing the battery status. The icon can be configured to show you an estimated time to empty or full battery in addition to percentage. You can also have your icon light up red if the battery is running low or your icon turn off if the battery is full. If you click on the icon a context menu will appear that will allow you to run commands, switch to battery percentage, or enter the menu. The icon can be dragged around the dock to move it in the dock, or it can be collapsed into a small square to save space. The icon can also be hidden from the dock by placing it on a separate desktop that is below the dock. When you unhide the icon the icon will reappear on the dock, and it will be shown in the location where it was previously. Your icon can be moved from your desktop to the dock as well. The icon will be moved to the dock, but it will be placed in the dock regardless of where it was previously. If you have the icon on the desktop, the icon can be collapsed to save space. If your icon is collapsed and you move it from your desktop to the dock, it will be moved to the dock and will appear on the dock in the location where it was previously. If you have the icon on your desktop when you hide it, it will be hidden from the dock. Each time you add another icon, the last icon you added is used as the base for your icon. The last icon you added is automatically changed to an icon of your choosing. Changing your icon to something different is as simple as changing the Icon tag in your icon tag file (see the next section). This only changes the icon shown on the dock, not the one that will actually be used to represent your icon. The icon in this example is an ugly, 3D render of a dollar sign. Notice how it is above the dock but it will only be used as a battery icon. If you remove the dollar sign, a battery icon will be used instead. How to add icons Adding icons to RocketDock is simple! 1. Go to your Applications folder and double click on an icon you want to add. 2 cc6f4944dd

Topic: Personal Ethics The following is a guide to the personal ethics as well as internet usage of the business student in today's world. Ethics A moral code developed by a culture is the standard by which individuals in that culture judge right and wrong. Ethics for a professional is often different from that of an individual. Professional work often requires one to work with, and in, people of many different races, religions and social backgrounds. A person who is working in a profession has a duty to act fairly and honestly in the course of the work he is doing. Professional persons must deal with legal and moral issues in their work. This means that a professional has a moral obligation to be honest in all situations, and to keep client's confidential information confidential. A businessperson is in a unique position because he or she deals with clients in a business setting and is often exposed to information that should not be discussed outside of the office or board room. A businessperson must be careful not to betray a client's confidence by sharing client information with people outside of the business setting, such as friends, family and other business colleagues. A professional is required to be honest with the client, to keep the client's project confidential, to be forthright and straight-forward in all business relations, and to keep all business dealings and transactions confidential. A businessperson must be honest with the client in the course of the business transaction. When a businessperson is not honest in any way, he or she can be viewed as a person who has a sense of ethics. An individual's sense of ethics can be enhanced by a positive mental attitude. High School Students A high school student has much to learn about life and the world outside of school. High school students should learn to avoid doing stupid or hurtful things. All high school students need to learn the definition of ethics. High school students should also learn the importance of protecting others from getting hurt. A high school student's sense of ethics should be developed by becoming aware of ethical issues and making wise choices in life. High school students should learn to be careful with their time and not to be frivolous. High school students should learn to be honest and to maintain personal dignity. High school students should learn to be respectful and courteous in all dealings with others. High school students should learn to live a balanced life and to be considerate of others. High school students need to learn that
