irc would that do it? poolie@dulwich:~$ less ~/.bzr/branch/branch.conf [general] real-chunksize = 1MiB i guess we could just move this to the default file poolie: That was kind of the plan, I think. I don't know if the default file gets picked up or not... s/file/convenience thing/ I'm pretty sure I did set it once... i'm pretty sure you have to manually read them from the log i think that's what you were doing have you tried hardcoding real-chunksize? i think that makes sense Or are you thinking of the default file from [general] ? yes i think that would work i thought you meant the default file on [general] I thought that would be [general] in the default file... But maybe not. So it may not work. i think it would be it is the convenience thing Sure. But only if there's a way to fall back to the default in the log. oh If there's a fallback in the log, sure. If not, there's no way to fall back. well it would be a bug if the default file from [general] didn't set real-chunksize (I'm an idiot in many ways, so...) because then the chunk size would get turned off and i think that would be bad Right. It would have to be intentional to make it fall back to the default file. it was intentional like i said, i think i did it once
