The only reason I have a pro license is because I develop on windows, so I'm not sure if I'm just getting the best bang for my buck with a consumer license. anyway, I just installed this CS6 upgrade and it won't launch, I get errors like "spinning beach ball", "crashy crash" and so on. Kinda new to mac, so am not sure what to do. Any help would be very appreciated. Thanks A: I had been waiting for the upgrade for a while, but even after I purchased the upgrade, I got the same error. Then, I got another error telling me that the CS6 upgrade installer had gone wrong. I finally managed to reinstall CS6 on my old MacBook Pro, and it has worked like a charm for a few months.

Gamma-aminobutyric acid and its receptors as targets of therapy in neuropsychiatric disorders. The discovery of the first and as yet only recognised receptor for gamma-aminobutyric acid (GABA) was a milestone in the development of receptor pharmacology, and its value to drug discovery is now widely recognised. Since then, the GABA(A) receptor has been the target of more than 2500 human drug trials, and the discovery and development of at least nine licensed drugs has been based on this. GABA(B) receptor ligands have been the focus of a smaller number of drug studies, but there is evidence that drugs which are antagonists at GABA(A) and agonists at GABA(B) receptors may be effective in epilepsy, depression and schizophrenia. The GABA(A) receptor subtypes to which drugs bind to achieve these effects are the benzodiazepine receptors, which are the most widely used GABA(A) receptor ligands. The benzodiazepine receptor, which has been studied extensively for decades, is a well defined drug target, with major clinical developments in the treatment of epilepsy and insomnia. The availability of genetic approaches has provided important insights into the functional organisation of the GABA(A) receptor subtypes, and understanding of the pharmacology of this receptor is as good as it is for any other receptor target. It is a good target for drug development.
